

Dear FCC Commissioners & Staff:

I writing to you because I just found out about the possibilty of My ISP having to go out of business because they might have to give up DSL service. I have been with Iglou since 1995 and I have found them to be really valuable to my internet experience. They have supplied me with great customer service, unlike a certain bell company (Fuse) that also provides ISP service.

I found since they are so big, there customer service is really lacking. Also the price I get from Iglou internet service. The same setup cost a lot more with Fuse.

If we get rid of ISP like Iglou, we will see a price increase in DSL service. I think if this happens this will hurt our economy, which is kind of floundering at best now.

Please do not get rid of the ISP's and let the Bell companies dictate how we should and whom we should connect to the internet. Lets keep technology growing.

Another point I want to make if ISP's lose broadband/DSL service, you will see a lot of companies close down and cause massive layoffs to the already high unemployment of the tech field.

Thanks,
Brad Goldman

Sincerely,

Bradley Goldman
